INFORMATION FOR TERMINATING EMPLOYEE REGARDING INVENTIONS AND PROPRIETARY INFORMATION

This is a reminder to all terminating employees of your continuing obligations to Conexant concerning inventions and proprietary information (technical or otherwise, including computer software). The obligations are set forth in your Rockwell International Employment Agreement, or your Conexant Systems, Inc. Employment Agreement, and include the following:

- (a) You may not use or disclose any confidential or proprietary information belonging to Conexant unless the information becomes publicly or generally known;
- (b) You may not use or disclose any confidential or proprietary information belonging to Conexant customers, suppliers, subcontractors, or any others having any kind of association or relationship with Conexant unless the information becomes publicly or generally known.
- (c) You must return all company or third party documents or other things (including all software) that, at the time of the termination of your employment, are in your possession, custody, or control by virtue of your employment, including anything that discloses or embodies any such confidential or proprietary information.
- (d) You must disclose to Conexant all inventions, discoveries, or improvements conceived or made while an employee, as required by your Rockwell International Employment Agreement, or your Conexant Systems, Inc. Employment Agreement.
- (e) You must assist Conexant, in a timely manner, with the prosecution and continuing patent practice of any patent application or issued patent on which you are a listed inventor.

In addition to the above obligations to Conexant, you may not export any technical data or disclose any technical data to a foreign national, whether or not such technical data is proprietary, without the prior approval of the U.S. Government under applicable export regulations.

Any questions concerning the above obligations should be directed to the Personnel Department or the Patent Counsel having cognizance of your organization.
